

PROTECTING DEMOCRACY:
USING RESEARCH TO INFORM THE VOTING RIGHTS
REAUTHORIZATION DEBATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2006

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, WASHINGTON CENTER

---

CO-SPONSORS ORGANIZATIONAL DESCRIPTIONS

---

University of California, Berkeley, School of Law
The Chief Justice Warren Institute on Race, Ethnicity and Diversity

The recently launched Chief Justice Warren Institute on Race, Ethnicity and Diversity (The Warren Institute) is a multidisciplinary, collaborative venture to produce research, research-based policy prescriptions, and curricular innovation on issues of racial and ethnic justice in California and the nation. The Warren Institute's mission is to engage the most difficult topics related to civil rights, race and ethnicity in a wide range of legal and public policy subject areas, providing valuable intellectual capital to public and private sector leaders, the media and the general public, while advancing scholarly understanding. Central to its methods will be concerted efforts to build bridges connecting the world of research with the world of civic action and policy debate so that each informs the other, while preserving the independence, quality and credibility of the academic enterprise.

University of California, Berkeley
Institute for Governmental Studies

The Institute of Governmental Studies (IGS) is an interdisciplinary organized research unit (ORU) that promotes research, training, educational activities, and public service in the areas of American and California politics and public policy. In recent years, IGS have focused more specifically on research related to institutional design and political reform including such topics as term limits, campaign finance, redistricting, direct democracy, immigration, and the role of the courts in regulating politics. We try to blend our academic mission of producing cutting-edge research about government with a strong public service role as an informal bridge between academia, public officials, and the media in California and Washington, D.C.