

The University of California Washington Program (UCDC) invites applications for visiting UC faculty teaching positions for a quarter or semester term during the academic year 2024-25.

UCDC is a system-wide academic program of the University of California in Washington, DC, that provides opportunities for undergraduates to study and participate in internships. Additionally, students take courses designed to supplement their internship experiences and to take advantage of opportunities in our nation's capital.

We invite applications from UC faculty in all fields to propose a course that engages with students' DC experience. The area of specialization is open and includes, but is not limited to, Ethnic Studies, Political Science, International Relations, Economics, Sociology, History, Anthropology, Public Policy, Public Health, Area Studies, Media, Law, Science Policy and Performing/Fine Arts.

We typically have two or three visiting UC faculty teaching at any one time. Appointments are usually for one term though longer periods may be considered. These positions are in Washington, DC, at the UC Washington Center, and residency in the DC metro area for the term of the appointment is a requirement. UCDC will provide one round-trip airfare and a non-smoking, furnished, one-bedroom apartment at the Washington Center for the duration of the appointment. We provide course relief to the home department for each course taught by visiting UC faculty. The teaching load for a single term is usually one quarter or one semester course of 25 students or fewer although faculty members may request to teach more courses.

To apply, please submit one pdf that contains in this order:

- A letter of interest (that includes one paragraph on teaching philosophy, one paragraph on commitment to diversity, equity, and inclusion, and one paragraph on how your proposed course relates to Washington, DC and/or experiential learning in DC).
- Course syllabus, proposal, or outline (you may submit one or more course proposal)
- A 2-page CV
- Evidence of teaching effectiveness (this can be teaching evaluations but may also take another form).

If you need assistance creating the pdf, please send your documents to : Executivedirector@ucdc.edu and someone will help you make the pdf.

Applications will be reviewed on a rolling basis, beginning on November 1, 2023. Please apply using this application form.
