

The University of California Washington Program (UCDC) has one or two visiting year-long UC faculty positions open for the academic year 2018-19.

UCDC is a system-wide academic program of the University of California in Washington, DC, that provides opportunities for undergraduates to study and participate in federal government, advocacy, international organizations, media, science policy and arts internships for a quarter or semester. Additionally, students carry a course load of academic work that includes a required research seminar and an optional elective course, each from a slate of several course offerings. All courses are designed in part to supplement student internship experiences and to take advantage of the many unique opportunities available in our nation's capital. Please see our website for more information about our past and current courses.

UCDC courses are taught by different types of instructors. Required seminars are taught usually by the full-time UCDC associate academic directors and year-long visiting UC faculty. Electives are taught largely by instructors who are local experts in their fields and by UC faculty visiting for a single quarter or semester. We typically have one or two visiting UC faculty teaching at any one time, or a total of three to four per year.

The teaching load for one-year visiting professors is four quarter courses or the semester equivalent. These are usually comprised of three required seminars (the same seminar can be repeated over three quarters) and one elective, all of 25 students or less. We are particularly interested in faculty who can teach international relations or policy, but will also consider those who can teach courses on US political institutions or public advocacy. In addition to teaching, visiting faculty are expected to participate in local UCDC faculty committees and other special assignments.

Home departments will be provided course relief for each course taught by the visiting faculty.

Applicants must be active, tenured University of California faculty. This appointment as a UCDC visiting faculty member requires a one-year commitment with the possibility of a one-year renewal. These positions are in Washington, DC at the Washington Center, and residency in the DC metro area for the term of the appointment is a requirement. UCDC will provide one round-trip airfare and a non-smoking, furnished, one-bedroom apartment at the UC Washington Center for the duration of the appointment.

Interested applicants should submit through the application portal a letter of interest, a CV, recent teaching evaluations (particularly for small courses, if available), and a relevant course syllabus by November 17, 2017. If you have any questions, please contact Dr. Jennifer Diascro, Associate Academic Director, at Jennifer.Diascro@ucdc.edu.
